THE SILENT PANDEMIC

Antimicrobial Resistance (AMR)

Antimicrobial resistance (AMR) occurs when bacteria, viruses, fungi, and parasites evolve to resist the effects of medications, rendering standard treatments ineffective. This leads to persistent infections and increases the risk of disease spread, severe illness, and death.

Superbugs: The Invisible Enemy

Multi drug resistant (MDR)
Resistance to more than one antimicrobial

Pan drug resistant (PDR)
Resistance to all antimicrobials

Stages of AMR Development in Superbugs

- 1 Antibiotic Exposure
- 2 Survival of Resistant Bacteria
- 3 Genetic Mutation and Replication Selection Pressure
- 4 Horizontal Gene Transfer
- 5 Spread of Resistant Strains

Increased resistance levels in microbes results in MDR

Biofilm formation - Microbes enclose in protective layer of slime

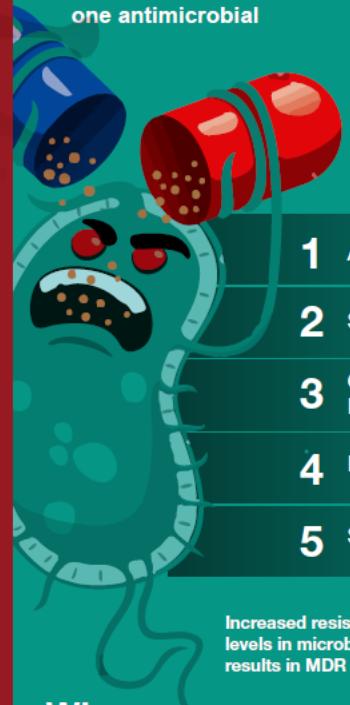

Why Superbugs are a Crisis?

- Increased Mortality rates
- Limited Treatment Options
- Increased Healthcare costs
- Re-emergence of Treatable Diseases
- Spread of Resistance across countries
- Potential for Global Pandemics

Some organisms have developed ways to resist antimicrobial actions

- Preventing access of antimicrobial into the organism
- Removing antimicrobial by pumps in cell wall
- Inactivation or destruction of antimicrobial by usage of enzymes
- Changing target site shape
- Developing new processes that do not require the target site

7,00,000 deaths per year globally

Simple Infections Can Become Death Sentences

Healthcare Investments Could Save 92 Million Lives by 2050

Causes of AMR

- Overuse of antibiotics accelerates resistance
- Inadequate Infection Control: Poor sanitation and hygiene practices in hospitals and communities contribute to the spread of resistant infections
- Lack of New Antibiotics: The development of new antibiotics is slow, with few effective treatments for resistant "superbugs"
- Over 70% of antibiotics are used in livestock for growth promotion and disease prevention
- COVID-19 Pandemic has increased antibiotic use and a rise in hospital-acquired infections

What Can You Do?

A GLOBAL HEALTH TIME BOMB

1.27 million deaths globally are directly attributed to AMR each year

$100 Trillion Global Economic Loss by 2050 due to prolonged illnesses and increased healthcare costs

$1 to $3.4 Trillion Reduction global GDP annually by 2030

Solutions and Global Efforts

Healthcare Investments Could Save 92 Million Lives by 2050

Accelerating Antibiotic Development Could Prevent 11 Million AMR Deaths by 2050

- Antibiotic Stewardship: Optimize the use of antibiotics in human and veterinary medicine to preserve their efficacy
- Infection Prevention: Strengthen hygiene practices, vaccination programs, and infection control in healthcare settings
- Investment in R&D: Develop new antibiotics and alternative therapies such as bacteriophages and vaccines

Individuals

- Only use antibiotics when prescribed by a healthcare professional.
- Complete the full course of antibiotics as directed.
- Practice good hygiene to prevent infections

Policymakers

- Implement policies to regulate antibiotic use in agriculture.
- Support research and innovation in new antimicrobial therapies
